Restaurateur Giuseppe Cipriani's mob-linked former right-hand man says his ex-boss knew about his criminal past when he was hired fresh out of prison.

As a Cipriani CEO, Pappas last year admitted raking in about $900,000 in salary - which prosecutors said was off the books. He also collected $1 million in Social Security and disability insurance, claiming he couldn't work because of a heart condition.

Pappas worked for Cipriani USA - the umbrella company for its posh restaurants and banquet halls - from June 2000 to April 2006 after serving four years in prison for federal racketeering and tax evasion. He has said he got the job after being "referred" by some Cipriani employees Pappas told a judge he reported only to Giuseppe as manager, chief operating officer, CEO and vice president of Cipriani USA.

Pappas was indicted in 1995 in a massive racketeering case.

But most counts against him were dropped after he threatened to reveal how the FBI recruited him to help spy on suspected terrorists following the 1993 World Trade Center bombing, records show. In his plea deal, Pappas agreed not to talk about the FBI's counterintelligence work.

The Royal House of Savoy is one of the oldest Royal Families in the world, having been established in 1003 in the Savoy region which included parts of northern Italy, France and Switzerland. By the 15th century, the family had substantially increased their territories in northern Italy and Amadeus VIII was appointed 'Duke of Savoy' by the Holy Roman Emperor, Sigismund. Later in the 15th century, attacked by France, the Savoyes retreated to their powerbase in Turin, and eventually threw in their lot with the arch enemy of the French, the Hapsburgs. As a reward, they were given the Kingdom of Sicily which they later traded for the Kingdom of Sardinia.

Victor Emmanuel III

His son, Victor Emmanuel III, then ruled from 1900 until 1946. His support of Mussolini and Italy's subsequent involvement with the Nazi regime, made his position untenable after the war and he abdicated in favour of his son, Umberto II.

Umberto II

Umberto II ruled for a few days over a month, as a constitutional referendum in June 1946 established the Italian Republic. On 12 June, he handed over power to the first Italian Prime Minister, Alcide de Gasperi. He left the country to exile in Portugal where he died in 1983.

In exile, the Royal House of Savoy has continued to be controversial. The leadership of the family is currently being disputed by Vittorio Emanuele, who uses the title of 'Prince of Naples', and 'King of Italy', and his cousin, Prince Amedeo, who claims the title 'Duke of Aosta' and 'Duke of Savoy'. They famously once came to blows during a dinner held by King Juan Carlos I of Spain. In 2006, Vittorio Emanuele was arrested in Varenna and imprisoned on charges of corruption.

Following his release he, and his son, Emanuele Filiberto, requested damages from the Italian State having been stripped of their wealth in the Italian Constitution. The Italian Government responded by suggesting that damages could be demanded from them as retribution for the family's collusion with Mussolini.
